Part 3: Translation

Translate the following passage into Urdu.

It is said that the only thing that English people are happy to talk about is the weather. Whenever they meet someone, they will say something like "lovely weather isn't it?" or "do you think it's going to rain today?" The reason for this is that in England nobody knows whether it will be sunny, rainy, foggy or snowy from one hour to the next.

In the subcontinent, the weather is not a very interesting thing to talk about. For example, if you are in Lahore in April it will be hot and sunny, while in August it will be very hot and rainy. In November it will be pleasantly cool and clear. Everyone knows what the weather will be like in a particular season so there really is no need to talk about it! [20]
