Part 3: Translation

Translate the following passage into Urdu.

Vultures play a very important role in the Indian sub-continent. They are unusual looking birds with only a few feathers on their head and neck. They survive by eating dead animals and by doing so they stop the spread of diseases. Farmers leave dead animals out in the fields knowing that they will be cleaned up by the vultures. During the last decade the number of vultures in some regions has fallen greatly. The reason for this is that vultures are harmed by some medicines that farmers feed to their cattle. As a result there are many more dead animals left in the fields, causing an increase in disease-carrying germs and insects.

According to one scientist, because vultures are quite ugly birds, no-one has been too worried about them dying out. Now people are beginning to realise the important job they do and why they need to be protected. A surprising effect of the shortage of vultures is an increase in the number of wild dogs who eat the corpses. With more wild dogs around there is a greater risk of people catching rabies. [20]
